Your students have never known a world without broadband Internet, hand-held video games, or cable television.

Eight is the average age at which they get their first cell phone, and information is never more than a Google™ search away.

Even though technology is changing their world every day, your students' need for quality literacy instruction remains the same. But teaching today's "digital natives" in a way that is meaningful to them requires more than merely embracing new technology. It also means learning how to use it to drive your instructional techniques.

That's where we can help.

The International Reading Association offers the practical tools, affordable professional development materials, and exceptional networking opportunities you need to succeed in the 21st Century classroom. And with IRA's new Online Membership option, you can access those resources when it's convenient for you—anytime, anywhere.

Go digital and discover how easy it is to navigate the world of IRA.
